Introduction

To assist in compliance with federal laws regarding lift truck operation, TLM and Toyota have developed the SAFE-Lift Operator Safety Program. Through implementation of SAFE-Lift in conjunction with existing plant safety programs, and use of the lift truck's Operators Manual, it is anticipated that accidents involving lift trucks at the work site can be reduced.

OSHA clearly states in OSHA section 1910.178 (I,1,i) The employer shall ensure that each power industrial truck operator is competent to operate a powered industrial truck safely, as demonstrated by the successful completion of the training and evaluation specified in this paragraph.

- 1 Operators must be trained on the type of trucks they operate on the job
- 2 Operators must be trained in the environment in which they work
- 3 Operators shall be evaluated and certified in both functions by a qualified person or persons

Formal operator training helps to increase operator efficiency and reduce the number of accidents. A study reported by the National Institutes for Occupational Safety indicated that trained operators reduced rates of error by 70% in the work place.

Safety Training For Present Lift Truck Operators

To comply with government regulations, your company's present lift truck operators must receive safety training. It is recommended that the operators also pass a written quiz, and be issued operator permits. The permits should be carried with them whenever they operate a lift truck.

The Cost Of Safety Training

Although OSHA makes safety training of lift truck operators a mandatory requirement, your company will miss many benefits if it views this training simply as an expense that must be incurred to comply with the law. Safety training does take time and cost money, but even on an accountant's profit and loss statement it makes sense. Remember, your company purchased a lift truck because it would save time and increase profits through mechanized material handling. Can you imagine how your business would now get along if you had to give up your lift trucks? yet a single accident, caused by an ignorant or careless operator, can result in personal tragedy, damaged materials and equipment, and disruption of company operations. So you can see, the time and money spent in safety training should be regarded as a sound business investment to ensure reliable and inexpensive material handling.
